

Suleman Nagdi MBE DL

Suleman Nagdi MBE DL is a community advocate of international repute. He has received numerous accolades including the awarding of an MBE by Her Majesty the Queen in 2002 and the National Police Award in 2005.

He has been a committed volunteer; serving the community for over three decades with the ability to galvanise individuals and communities. His unique strength of character and selfless attitude in the service of others has driven him into taking a role of being an advocate with those in society that often need a voice. Suleman has for many years made regular and frequent appearances on local, national and international print and broadcast media outlets.

Suleman has worked on many diverse issues at regional, national and international level. His knowledge and experience of the diverse community and national issues has made him invaluable in securing service provisions for all communities.

Suleman holds and has held many strategic roles in the community. He works with the Home Office, Foreign & Commonwealth Office, Charity Commission and Department for International Development and other Government Departments.

Suleman became a Deputy Lieutenant of Leicestershire in 2008.